"Our attention has been called to a series of sketches just published by A. Williams & Co., of Boston, entitled 'Mr. Hardy Lee, his Yucht; being twenty four sketches on stone, by Chinks,' which evince decided talent, and will be much enjoyed by the admirers of the kindred composition of beech and Doyle, in England. The story of a borting man is excellently well fold by this series of sketches, in which the drollery and distinctions of character carry us pleasantly through a prettily suggested story. The sketches are unequal, and the faults of a beginner are apparent, but the individuality and expression of the different faces are quite surprising. In the third sketch, for instance, the reading matter is scarcely necessary to tell us the different views of Mr. Lee's family, to whom he announces his intention of keeping a vacht. A number of seaviews are also given, which are drawn with great spirit. The twelfth sketch—the great of the collection—admirably represents the repose and listerness of a calm at sex."

The Republic of Honduras, in which the greater part of secure described in this book are laid, has recently excited great niety in the minds of the public, as much from its being seene of a long pending dispute between the United States is England, as from the interesting character of its natural profitions, resources, and inhabitants. The author, who has be among the first to describe its peculiarities, white the coun in the capacity of a mining adventurer, and, under the specific protection of the Government, penetrated into a portion of State known as Olancho, and famed throughout Central Americal valuable gold mines. Here he spent the greater pof a year, closely examining the mineral and agricultural pacifies of the country, joining in the primitive customs of secluided people, and acting to some extent the pert of a Rod son Crusoe. The climate, plants, birds, and the habits of people are closely observed, and detailed with a graphic reflictious pen; adventures by river and field follow one anoth in rapid succession, and these are interspersed with description connected and contume and frequent dashes of humor, which the sources the material for a history of Central Amer which follows the narrative, and is, in fact, the only complistorical sketch of that country. EDWARDS'S TRAVELS IN EUROPEA, RANDOM SKETCHES AND NOTES OF EUROPEAN TRAVELIN 1836. By the Rev. Jons E. Edwards, A.M. 12mo., Muslin, $1.

The author of these readable and useful sketches visited England, Scotland, France, Germany and Italy, for the benefit of his health, with three young sentlemen for companions, and kept a copious journal of his daily experience. The work is graphic and interesting, and, at the same time, entirely practical in its character, and adapted to the use of travelers. It consists of an actual record of incidents in the order of their occurrence, and hence possesses great interest for future tourists who may go over the same ground, as well as for those who read only for instruction or smusement. It has the merits of an excellent guide-book, to which is added the attraction of personal adventure.

ANTHON'S JUVENAL.

THE SATYRES OF JUVENAL AND PERSIUS. With English Notes, Critical and Explanatory. By CHARLES ANTHON, LL. D. Portrait. 12mo., sheep extra, 20c.

The universal success which has attended the scholastic labors of Professor ANTHON best attents the distinguished merit with which his series has been regarded by the learned world.

Says The London Athensum: "Dr. Anthon has done more for sound classical school literature than any half dozen Englishmen. His books are admirably edited. His merits as an editor of the school classics are so well understood and apprecisted in this country, as well as in his own, that commendation would be superfluese."

"We consider his agrics of School Classics, to stand one. "We consides his series of 'School Classics' to stand rivaled in their department of education, whether we reg the extent of scholarship which they display or the easy action by which the student is lad from the first principle a complex language to its final and assurate combinations, union of the highest classical knowledge, with the power adapting it to the student, is of rare occurrence, these tributes characterize this excellent series."
